DONNINGTON,

A PARISH, containing a small market town, in the wapentake of Kirton, 111 miles from London, 30 from Lincoln and 11 from Spalding; situated in the fens, through which a firm rampart of earth of considerable breadth has been laid, which forms a convenient road to Sempringham. The parish church is ancient, with a steeple, on the lower part of which is a stone with Roman characters, but time has deprived them of legibility. Here is a good free-school, endowed by Lord Cowley; and the poor of the town are benefited by some other charities. Hemp and hemp-seed are the principal articles of trade here, which has also the advantage of a water conveyance to Boston. The market day is Saturday, and the fairs are May 16th and October 26th, for horses, cattle, flax and hemp. In 1821 the parish contained 1,638 inhabitants.

EPWORTH, OWSTON AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

EPWORTH is a parish and market-town, in the wapentake of Manley and division of Lindsay, in the isle of Axholme, 30 miles N.N.W. of Lincoln and 12 miles north of Gainsborough. W. B. P. Johnson, Esq. is lord of the manor, and holds manorial courts twice a year, in a building erected for that purpose, in the Market-place. The parish church, dedicated to St. Andrew, the living of which is a rectory, is in the gift of the crown, and in the incumbency of the Rev. George Beckett. The other places of worship are, a chapel each for the baptists, the old and new connexion, and primitive methodists. The principal trade of the place is in dressing flax and hemp, large quantities being grown in the neighbourhood; and many of the inhabitants are employed in the manufacture of sacking and canvas. The weekly market is on Thursday, and there are two annual fairs, on the first Thursday after the 1st of May, and the Thursday after the 29th of September, for cattle, hemp and flax: the parish of Epworth contained, in 1821, 1,763 inhabitants.
