"You will gather from all this that my school days were full of happiness and activity. I feel a tremendous gratitude for all that I learned there, and all that it helped me to become as a person. When I began to teach I realised that I was, unconsciously, modelling my own methods on those of the people who taught me, and I realised, too, how far-reaching and important an influence a school and its teachers can have."

Lesley Loddington. (nee Tolliday).

"You young ones will have the world to do with as you please. But don't think you can begin the world again as though nothing had ever happened before.

There is all that loveliness, that beauty, longing to be used.

The lessons that you are to learn are the very same lessons that generation after generation has learned before you.

Take the past which is beseeching you not to desert it, and let it mingle with the present.

Don't let modern cleverness make you contemptuous of all that has gone before you. They were as clever as you in their own generation.

This beauty, this history, this love that has sunk into these walls and strengthened these trees – carry these on with you as your companions."

Hugh Walpole

"The Young Enchanted."
